

January 15, 2016

TOP STORY

Millennials making mark on housing market

When Chase Geiser bought his first house last summer, a 1930s home near downtown Nashville, he was looking for a good investment in an up-and-coming neighborhood. He also became part of a new wave of millennial generation home buyers who are changing neighborhoods and home design across the region.

GREEN BUILDING

Hamlet Homes Honored with 2015 Green Business Award for Sustainable Business & Design by Utah Business Magazine

Hamlet Homes, a Salt Lake City-based homebuilder committed to building quality, energy-efficient homes in attractively designed communities, was awarded a 2015 Green Business Award in the category of Sustainable Business & Design by Utah Business magazine.

Hamlet, the only homebuilder to receive the 2015 award, was among 16 honorees that included the University of Utah, Smith's Food & Drug, Utah Transit Authority and EMC. "Hamlet Homes is honored to receive this prestigious recognition," said Hamlet Chairman and CEO, Michael Brodsky. "Since our founding in 1994, our company has been committed to building beautiful single-family homes, townhomes and twin homes that provide home buyers the best in energy efficiencies. We also strive to build in neighborhoods that feature a walkable lifestyle with convenient amenities, transportation options and abundant recreational opportunities." Brodsky added that the company's recent energy-efficient, solar townhome community, Nevis at Newport in Park City, UT, sold out 22 townhomes within six months of the Grand Opening in March 2015. "The demand for these top-rated, energy-efficient townhomes attests to the appetite home buyers have for green, sustainable living."